The following is Count Bernstors's Answer:

"THE King, my master, as faithful to his engagements as to his love for peace, and to the general westare which is his constant care, could not infringe upon the facred stipulations of a defensive treaty, without the express consent of that power which had an incontestible right to claim them. The King was, therefore, obliged to inform Rusha, and consult with her on the defice which the Ministers Pleasurest interan incontention right to Claim them. The King was, therefore, obliged to inform Russa, and consult with her on the desire which the Ministers Plenipotentiary of Great Britain, Prussa, and the States General of the United Provinces stad intimated, in the names of their respective Sovereigns, concerning a perfect and both by see and land. Illoudy this resultance is the bottom incompatible with the cession of the succours stipulated in a treaty, the sole end of which is a mutual desence, the King (who has found in the friendship and moderation of the Empress of Russa a perfect concurrence with his own sentiments, and convinced, besides, with that august Princess, that the three united Courts, are only actuated in their proceedings by their love for a general peace) consents to observe, during the present troubles in the North, such a neutrality as the three said Courts have proposed. In return for which, his Majesty, on his side, requires, that, by a happy return of the same principles and sentiments on their part, the three high Courts will preserve and maintain, during all that Courts will preferre and maintain, during all that time, the fame neutrality relative to the affairs of the North, in order, by their joint cares and endeavours, to accelerate the reftoration of a general peace, which is the fole deare of his Majesty.

Many noblemen of the first distinction are missing;

but it is uncertain whether they have effected their e-fcape, or remain concealed in Paris. The Prince de Lambeld was reported to have been taken in the dif-

the intrigues of the Clergy; he is not respected in an equal degree with either of the last Presidents; and distentions among the Members of the National Assembly daily become visible!—The Court Party will of fail to make their advantage of this.

The patriotilin of the Count de Broglio is the theme of univerfal admiration; he had determined to fulfil his duty as a foldier, by obeying his father's order to fire; but at the fame time affured the Marthal, that he would place himself fo as to fall the first victim of Rumours of plots and confpiracies are in circula-

Baron de Bezenval is to be tried immediately. He is in fafe custody. He was General of the King's troops in the district of Paris at the time of the revolution; was in all the fecrets of the Court party, and was the person who wrote to the governor of the Bastile to defend the garrison but for twelve hours, and all would be safe. Most of the roads in France are befer with troops of banditti and robbers, which are chiefly composed of foreigners. These banditti consist of people unknown to the inhabithnts of the various provinces, and who have all of a sudden swarmed the country.—At Strasburgh they committed great excesses, and nearly three hundred of them have been taken into custody. The National Assembly are now pursuing proper measures, in order to put a stop to these enormities.

All the northern provinces of the kingdom are in a state of the most furious rebellion and anarchy.—
The foldiery, for want of a proper controul, daily commit the most flagrant ourrages, and the militia are too weak to afford protection. The coast bordering on the British Channel is lined with armed burghers, so that it is impossible to leave the kingdom without being known.

IT is much to be lamented, that the records of this abominable inftrument of despotifint, prejudice, and private pique, did not escape the first transport of popular surv. They "would have snatched from oblivion the persibable infamy of its name, and made it immortal." Much the greater part of them, it is to be feared, is irretrievably lost. From the fragments, the following list of persons, with the offences for which they were committed, has been published at Paris. The publisher gives notice, that he has scrupulously adhered to the precise expressions of the Register, in which it will perhaps excite surprize that there should be so much simplicity and truth. NANTES IN BRITTANY.

We have lately had a very violent alarm here. On the 1st ult. the inhabitants were called together by the found of the Tockin, (alarm-bell) and the beating of drums, to oppose a body of troops which were faid to be coming to restore order, by dist of force, amongst the people, who, since the news of what had been done at Paris had reached them, were in a terrible star of estances. rible state of effervescence.

In consequence of this report, immediate possession was taken of the Cassle, and the military driven from it; and, in less than an horr, 20,000 men with Liberty cockades, were armed and disposed for combat. The bridges were about to be demolished, guards were distributed every where about the town, and a general enthusias prevailed amongst our new year. were distributed every where about the town, and a general enthusias prevailed amongst our new warriors, who breathed nothing but destruction to their

The popular rage occasioned by the alarm, which, whether well or ill-founded, time will foon dourning, spread by the failing of the English squadron, is inconceivable. To fatisfy the people who called for vigorous measures, orders have been actually fent to Brest, enjoining the Port Admiral to get twelve fail of the line ready for sea with all possible expedition.

That fuch orders have been fent, is certain; but by whom, whether by the King, or the National Affembly, is not yet publicly known.

If they have been fent by the King, they will be obeyed;—if by the National Affembly, nothing but force will be able to prevail upon the Port Admira to execute them.

Their Majesties have honoured Lulworth Castle, the seat of Mr Weld, (the brother of Mrs Fitzherbert's first husband), and Sherborne Castle, a fest of Lord Digby, with visits. They were charmed with the situation of each, but still more with the manner in which they were received, and entertained, at both.

The King does not come to town, as arranged, to prorogue the Parliament. The fact is, that from every report, what from the change of conarranged, to prorogue the Parliament. ## PRINCE OF WALES.

Yesterday, being the Anniversary of the birth of his Royal Highness the PRINCE OF WALES, when he entered into the 28th year of his age, in the morning, the flag was displayed from the Castle; at noon the music bells were set a ringing; and the fame was likewife observed as a holiday at the Banks and other public offices. In the afternoon, the Servants of the Prince, in this place, dined together in Fortune's tavern, where an elegant and fumptuous entertainment was prepared for them, and the evening was spent with the utmost festivity.—Many loyal and constitutional toufts were drank.

The Hon. HENRY ERSKINE, Dean of Faculty, in the Chair.

No birth-day of his Royal Highness has been observed with fo much celebrity in this city as the prefent. All ranks and degrees of people feemed to join in effusions of loyalty on the happy occasion. The great bells, which are seldom rung, but on the anniverfary of his Majefty's birth-day, vefterday rung from fix to eight o'clock in the evening; and the peals in St Andrew's Church, New Town, would have likewise announced the joyful event, had not the Lord Provost received a letter from a physician of eminence, intimating the very great diffres some patients of his in the near neighbourhood laboured under, and who might be materially injured by the noffe thereby occasioned. Several individuals teftified their loyalty by a display of fire-works; but the most conspicuous, and which particularly attracted the attention of the public, were those exhibited by Mr William Fraser, tin-plate worker to his Royal Highness, Kirkbraehead, the refidence of Mr Fraser, where these fireworks were fet off, is a fituation, perhaps, the best calculated in the city or neighbourhood, to flew with proper effect their brilliancy, as it is exactly on a line with Prince's Street, one of the most extensive and finest streets in Europe. No previous intimation having been given of this exhibition few spectators, at the commencement, attended. The capital fky-rockets, however, which were first fet off, and the bonfire which blazed before the place, foon attracted the attention of the public, and a numerous and genteel company testified their approbation and applause of the well-meant and well-executed exertions of an individual, in honour of a Prince whom all parties must revere for his many and confpicuous virtues. Meff. Jones and Parker had alfo an elegant display of fire-works at their Circus on Leith-Walk, in of the Prince's birth-day, which were wet and had a fine effect.

The Prince of Wales is so generally the subject of eulogy in all Foreign Courts, and so justly celebrated by such as have the happiness of being more intimately known to him at home, that, to delineate his Royal Highness's character, is little more than to transcribe the page of panegyric; and it may be very truly faid in the language of the poet,

" That Truth is Panegyric here."

Generous youth, like generous wine, is subject to fermentation, which perhaps operates alike in both, and equally contributes to excellence in maturity.—
There is a genial warmth in the youthful bosom, that, if prudence cannot altogether reftrain, it will not al-ways censure.—Reelaimed from the feductive charms of women, and the bewitching finiles of Burgundy, the Prince of Wales is viewed by the people as a pledge of happiness and future greatness to Old Eng-

Henry the Fifth is the model most analogous in hi-Henry the Heir Apparent of Britain.—The Royal Henry emerged from a fimilar cloud that fluded and obscured him before he ascended the throne of Engobscured him before he ascended the throne of Eng-land; and the first son of George the Third is every-way worthy a comparison with the Conqueror of A-gincourt. A generous people, like the people of England, readily pardon errors that proceed from the-mere intemperate levity of youth.—The Prince of Wales possess the affection and the confidence of the kingdom. His Royal Righness's elevated station has not removed the pains and assignment of his rank. "He possesses of personal elegance, impropoffesse all the graces of personal elegance, improved by education, cultivated by letters, and enlarged by an acquaintance with men, rarely attained by per-fons fo far removed from the walks of private life; is greatly endowed with powers of pleafing, and capa-cities of a convival and focial kind, nothing inferior to those so much admired in Charles the Second." to those to much admired in Charles the Second."—
He is affable, polite, generous, manly, and every way engaging; plays admirably on the piano forte, dances gracefully, fences well, is a fine horseman, and positifies manners full of digaity and grace! Yet these are only secondary qualifications. His Royal Highness is known to be an excellent classical scholar, and what is well understood by the expression of "a nuclear way and the secondary was a secondary to the secondary to t what is well underflood by the expression of "A deel" read man." He is reported to read Homer, Horace, and Virgil, with the frictest propriety, and to excel eminently in the grace and elegance of elocution. He certainly speaks and writes note of the modern leaves are well discovered. 00 W The bounty of his heart is the proud theme of every tongue, and has been the great outlet of that in-come, to much the subject of detectable obloquy and illiberal inveftigation—an income exceedingly limited and comparatively small.—It is much less than that of many private Gentlemen in England; and le it not be forgotten that Carleton House is a national ornament, and the only habitable palace Great Britain can boaft.

His Royal Highness has turned the tide of fashion in favour of England, and is the pattern of every Court of Europe. The supposition that money is the only good, is a policy as shallow as it is base. "The only good, is a policy as shallow as it is base. "The particular kind of trassic, by which money is circular-ted without any national impoverishment."—It is the consolation of the people of England, that his Royal Highnels was born and bred among them; that he knows no other, and that his whole sear is English. What failings he has are known, but not half his virtues.—It is known, however, that he is humane, generous, sincere, steady in his friendships; mild, open, affable, and forbearing. Although formed by nature affable, and forbearing. Although formed by nature and education to captivate the female heart, and feelingly alive to the impressions of beauty, he has never been known to invade the recess of domestic happiness, or injure the peace of an individual.—" The morality of a Prince (fays Junius) is not to be measured by vulgar rules. There are faults that do him honour there are virtues that diffrace him."

His Royal Highneffes's warm attachment to Women, has been imputed to him as a crime of malignity, and has been impreffed on the public mind with inceffant and studied rancour; but if this is a crime, Nature's felf shares the blame, as having uniformly impregnated the most accomplished of her offspring with the largest have of the generous impulse. The fellish, the austere, and what are emphatically denominated the prudent youth, are proof against the accesses of every passion that militares against those tame, grovelling pursuits, to which they are alone addicted. "They mistake (says the Biographer of a great Political Character) apathy for continence, frigidity for chalitry, the fulfidious punctilios of pride for the refolutions of principle; and, belighted by Nature or benumbed by Art, in the room of the finest, they substitute the most fordid attachments."

Two striking and important facts will stand in perpetual testimony, as an invincible establishment of his petual teltimony, as an invincible eftablishment of his Royal Highnets's fame and character; namely, his noble represent from the splendour of a Court, in order to do justice to his creditors; and his moderation, temperance, and wildom, upon a very late try-ing and awful occalion. These are alone adequate to as the stamp of honour indelible upon his charac-

Among men or lating, his koyal Highness is the chief—To men of letters, artilts, and manufacturers, a patron; and to the rights of mankind a friend.

We shall conclude this imperfect sketch of a truly great and amiable character, with the following applicable lines from Dryden:—

Whato'er he does, is done with fo much eafe. In him alone 'is natural to please; Its motions all accompanied with grace, and Paradife is open'd in his face. We echo but the voice of Fame,

COURT OF SESSION.

COURT OF SESSION.

GAME.

A question of very general importance to all Sportfmen, and particularly to those who are qualified, was larely brought before the Court of Session, at the instance of the Earl of Breadalbane against Thomas Livingstone, Esq; of Parkhall.—In September 1788, Mr Livingstone made an excursion to the muirs of Glerqueich in Perthhire, to take the diversion of mainfovi shooting.—These mairs are part of the extensive possession belonging to Lord Breadalbane, who brought a process of declarator and damages, along with a bill of suspension and inserdict, against Mr Livingstone, for the purpose of having it found and declared, by decreer of the Court of Session, that Mr Livingstone, though possession of the highest qualification, at any time required by law, for killing game, had no right to hunt spon his Lordship's open and uninclosed grounds without his express content, and that he ought to be subjected in payment of damages and expences. This question, which has taised much expression, came to be argued before Lord Monbodilo, Ordinary, on Friday, Saturday, and Tuesday last; when his Lordship was pleased to pronounce a judgment in favour of Mr Livingstone, assisting him from the action at the instance of the Earl of Breadalban.

—A young woman of the name of Orr, having been lately delivered, had the inhumanity to expose her infant to the most imminent danger, by laying it down at the door of one M'Kune, (about twelve at night,) who, she says, is the father of the child. Some of her neighbours having got timeous information of such an act of cruelty, humanely came to the affictance of the infant, and had it propesly taken care of. Immediate search was then made for the unfeeling mother, who was soon after sound out, by the scent of a bull dog, and afterwards committed to Kirkcudbright gaol.

On Friday last, the young man whom we mentioned in our paper of Thursday last, as imposing on the public, by selling sugar mixed with sand, was brought to Dumsfries from Annan, where he had been practising the same exploits; and after having undergone an examination before the Magistrates, was, by them, ordered to the house of correction.

Stirling and Linlithgow Turnpikes.

At a general meeting of the Truftees of these Roads, on the 4th current, they confidered the drast of the new Turnpike Bill for the county of Stirling, as transmitted by their Solicitor from London; and several attentions and amendments were adopted. The proceedings of two meetings of the Fulkirk or eight district of roads, by order of the district, were haid upon the table, giving it as their opinion, that coal ought to be subjected to toll-duty, and recommended the same to be taken under consideration of the county.

It was suggested that the present low toll-duties, with the exemption on coal carts,—the probable decrease of the sunds upon the Kiliyth toll-bar,—and proposal of removing the toll upon the Killyth toll-bar,—and propofal of removing the toll from the town of Stirling, will render the funds inadequate to the purpole of a proper repair of the roads, and diffchurging the late encreased load of debt, incurred by rebuilding for many expensive bridges as were destroyed by the heavy floods in December 1787.

It was also moved that there should be a clause in the new bill, declaring no tell should be levied on the new lines of road, until these roads were made and completed.

It was likewise moved, that the former resolution, respectiin December 1787.

ing the removal of the Stirling toll-bar to Saint Ninis ing the removal of the Stirling toll-bar to Saint Ninians, be taken under review.

All which feveral motions the meeting agreed flould be taken under confideration upon Turfday the 25th August 1789; notice is therefore hereby given, that a meeting of the forefaid truftees will be held at Stirling upoff that day, at eleven forenoon, for their purposes, and finally to refolve upon the draft of the new turnpixe bill, printed copies of which will be ready to be delivered the truftees on the 18th infasts, at the office of Meff.
